

FEEDBACK ON THE JOINT COMMUNICATION ON THE NEW ACTION PLAN FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRACY (2015-2019)

Introduction

The European Partnership for Democracy (EPD), the European Network of Political Foundations (ENoP), the European Endowment for Democracy (EED) and the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (International IDEA) welcome the invitation to provide feedback on the draft Action Plan on Human Rights and Democracy (2015-2019).

We note the potential of the Action Plan to support democratic principles and processes, among others:

- The reference to the need for “renewed political commitment and additional efforts ... for democracy support”;
- The recognition of the importance of inclusive dialogue for strengthening democracy;
- The commitment to “Step up EU engagement with political parties and citizen movements with a view to strengthening their role in fostering democratic and accountable institutions and practices...”, and;
- The focus on addressing threats to civil society space.

To further strengthen the democracy dimension of the proposed Action Plan, and taking into account:

- a) Article 21 of the Lisbon Treaty;*
- b) The Council Conclusions on Democracy Support in EU External Relations of 2009, in particular the six principles of EU democracy support;*
- c) The EU Strategic Framework and the first Action Plan on Human Rights and Democracy (2012-2014);*
- d) The Communication on the roots of democracy and sustainable development: Europe's engagement with Civil Society in external relations;*
- e) The current Multiannual Indicative Programme (2014-2020) of the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights, in particular Specific Objective 3: Support to Democracy, and;*
- f) The on-going review of the European Neighbourhood Policy, which is of crucial importance for the EU's democracy support agenda,*

EPD, EED, ENoP and International IDEA suggest that the EU take on board the following recommendations:

Recommendations

N.B.: More detailed recommendations can be found in the attached document (underlined and marked in red and italics).

1. Imbalance between Human Rights and Democracy support

Democracy Support is a core ambition of the EU. Democratic countries tend to respect and protect the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of their citizens more effectively than non-democratic countries. If the EU wants to support Human Rights effectively, it needs to provide stronger support to democratic actors and democratic processes in partner countries.

The Joint Communication makes reference to the unfinished work and lack of sufficient achievement in EU democracy support and the resulting need for “renewed political commitment and additional efforts ... for democracy support” (p. 4). It explicitly notes the goal to “mainstream [democracy support] across a number of objectives”.

The Action Plan does not however follow up, neither with concrete proposals for action, nor with sufficient explicit references to democracy support, nor any sort of mainstreaming. In fact, three of the five proposed headings (II. Addressing key HR challenges, III. Ensuring a comprehensive HR approach to conflicts and crises, and IV. Fostering better coherence and consistency) barely refer to democracy support.

Recommendation: The new Action Plan should highlight the importance of democracy support, in consistency with the goals stated in the introduction, by including it as an individual heading. Furthermore, the EU should include the additional changes in the five remaining headings listed in the attached document.

2. Defining Democracy Support

The Joint Communication does not state clearly what the EU means by “Human Rights” or “Democracy Support”. Human Rights and Democracy Support are two distinct fields of work for the EU, with different – albeit overlapping – policies and working methods.

Recommendation: The new Action Plan should explicitly state what is meant by democracy support, in line with the six principles adopted by the EU in its Council Conclusions on Democracy Support in EU External Relations: A country-specific approach, Dialogue and partnership, EU coherence and coordination, Mainstreaming, International cooperation and Visibility.

3. Building on existing policies and practice in EU Democracy Support

The Joint Communication refers to the Strategic Framework and the first EU Action Plan for Human Rights and Democracy (2012 – 2014) without specifying the results of any of its democracy-related actions. The achievements noted in the Action Plan’s introduction (pp. 3-4) only refer to the EU’s human rights work (with the exception of enhancing the EU democracy support’s visibility and accountability). The communication’s reference to “a solid basis for the EU’s continuous commitment to uphold respect for HR and support democratic transition processes worldwide” remains weak without a reference to concrete achievements.

The new proposed Action Plan thus appears to be starting from scratch and does not build on the already existing foundation of democracy support. In addition, there is a lack of concrete action to support democratic principles and processes in partner countries.

Recommendation: The new Action Plan should highlight key outcomes of the past Action Plan and identify best practices of EU democracy support, including from the democracy support pilot exercise (Democracy Profiles and Action Plans), as well as from the results of related EU instruments and policies. This would allow for the development of an enhanced and coherent approach to effective democracy support in EU external action.

4. A broader definition of stakeholders and partners of EU Democracy Support

Democracy is an inclusive and participatory process, which involves a wide range of public, private and civil society stakeholders. In order to enhance the ownership of this process and its results, the EU needs to engage with and strengthen all stakeholders in partner countries in an inclusive way. Peer organisations can also serve to share best practices and directly support local partner organisations.

Recommendation: The Action Plan should mention the entire range of stakeholders and partners in EU democracy support, including within the EU. This means recognising the role of governments and public institutions, local authorities, parliaments, political parties and foundations, Civil Society Organisations (CSOs), NGOs and other organisations working in democracy support, trade unions, Human Rights Defenders (HRD) and democracy activists.

5. Capitalising on EU Election Observation Missions

Elections are an important element of functioning democracies. The EU has extensive experience in election monitoring and electoral assistance. However, it should do more in following up on official statements and reports of Election Observation Missions (EOMs), integrating those into broader democracy support.

Recommendation: The Action Plan should promote greater collaboration and coordination among EU Institutions (including the European Parliament), EU Member States and international and regional organisations to enhance the long-term impact of EOMs, and the implementation of EOM recommendations.

6. Supporting inclusive and participatory democracy more effectively

The draft Action Plan seems to favour a technical approach to “building institutions”, such as election management bodies, parliaments, justice sector institutions and other public institutions. However, public institutions are built and shaped by the interaction of many different forces, first and foremost human agency. The EU should therefore invest more resources in getting a better understanding of the interests and incentives for change of all the relevant stakeholders in partner countries, as defined in point 4 above.

Recommendation: The Action Plan should include actions aimed at improving the understanding of EU staff of the political realities underlying democratic change. In that sense, EU guidelines for democracy support should be elaborated and appropriate training provided for EU staff in Delegations and at headquarters levels, building on the lessons learned from the democracy support pilot exercise (first and second generation pilot countries).

"Keeping human rights at the heart of the EU agenda"

Introduction

The purpose of the present Joint Communication by the European Commission and the High Representative of the European Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy is to contribute to the elaboration of a new Action Plan on Human Rights and Democracy for the period 2015-2019.

Human rights and democracy as EU's guiding principles

Today's world is unstable and fast changing one, a world in which human rights and democratic principal and processes are often questioned and in many places ignored. Human rights violations have increased in volume and intensity, civil society sees its action curtailed, conflicts have become multi-faceted and authoritarian regimes have become bolder. Globalisation entails new challenges which make the protection of human rights and democracy support even more complex.

In these circumstances, international attention is naturally focused on stability. However, lasting stability cannot be achieved through security and economic prosperity alone. Citizens' loyalty towards their state and their reliance on peaceful means depend on whether they feel that they are protected against arbitrary decisions and that their views can influence political decision making. Indeed, inclusion and participation are indispensable preconditions for sustainable development. This can only be achieved in a democratic society, based on respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, in which the government works in a transparent manner and is held accountable; where the parliament has the capacities to reflect the pluralism of views and is able to reflect the variety of views and interests of its population, civil society is vibrant, the media is free and the justice system is independent.

Discussions around the post-2015 sustainable development goals, with their emphasis on human rights and women's rights as self-standing goals reflect this objective.

This is why the Union must keep human rights at the heart of its external action. Article 21 of the Treaty on European Union (TEU) guides the Union's action externally and reaffirms the EU's role in promoting, inter alia, democracy, the rule of law, the universality and indivisibility of human rights and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is binding on the EU institutions and on the Member States when they implement Union law. In addition, the EU is a party to some instruments of the United Nations and the Council of Europe, such as the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD). The Union's credibility as a global advocate of human rights rests on these pillars.

The 2012 Human Rights and Democracy Package

In 2012 the EU adopted an ambitious programme – the Strategic Framework on Human Rights and Democracy<sup>1</sup> – which sets out how it intended to honour its Treaty obligation to advance democracy, the rule of law, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human rights.

Almost three years after its adoption, the Strategic Framework, with its priorities and guiding principles continues to provide the framework for the Union's action.

Another milestone in the EU's Human Rights policy was the 2012 decision to establish the post of the EU Special Representative (EUSR) on Human Rights. The EUSR has enhanced the visibility and effectiveness of the EU Human Rights policy, elevated the level of interaction with our partners and helped us advance specific priorities. The decision<sup>2</sup> taken by the Council to extend the mandate of the EUSR by another two years recognises this important role.

The third essential element of the Human Rights package adopted in 2012 was the Action Plan on Human Rights and Democracy (2012-2014)<sup>3</sup>, which helped to implement the commitments made in the Strategic Framework.

This Action Plan contained a set of 97 actions covering a broad range of human rights and democracy issues, to be implemented both by the EU and at the national level by the Member States. It committed all stakeholders to clear objectives within well-defined timeframes.

Achievements of the 2012-2014 Action Plan

The 2012-2014 Action Plan provided an important leverage to secure the engagement of all relevant stakeholders and ensured that they stayed focused on a number of key objectives. The work done under this Action Plan led to a number of important achievements.

The Action Plan increased the mainstreaming of human rights considerations into the full range of EU external policies and their implementing operations, leading to concrete changes on the ground. The steps taken towards integrating human rights considerations in the impact assessments carried out for legislative and non-legislative proposals, the inclusion of human rights assessments as an overarching element in the deployment of EU aid are only a few examples.

The Action Plan also helped the EU develop the tools and resources needed to formulate and implement a more coherent policy. The establishment of a Brussels-based Council Working Group on Human Rights (COHOM), the adoption of a set of detailed EU guidelines on key human rights issues (freedom of religion or belief<sup>4</sup>, Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Intersex (LGBTI) rights<sup>5</sup>, freedom of expression online and offline<sup>6</sup>), the adoption of a toolbox for a rights-based approach to development, the adoption of local Human Rights Country Strategies based on the cooperative work of EU Delegations and Member States' Embassies, the setting up of human rights focal points in EU Delegations, the improvement of a targeted training programme for EU staff and Member States' diplomats, have all contributed to this goal.

The Action Plan also advanced effective multilateralism through the development of annual strategies and priorities of the EU in UN human rights fora, in particular the UN Human Rights Council. In addition it focused EU action on a number of key priorities, including rights of women and girls, children's rights, and LGBTI rights, and called for further work in the area of economic, social and cultural (ESC) rights, in line with the Union's commitment to the indivisibility of human rights. Furthermore, the Action Plan devoted attention to disability matters in line with the obligations enshrined in the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD).

The Action Plan strengthened the EU's cooperation with and support to civil society worldwide. It mainstreamed the practice of consulting Civil Society Organisations (CSOs) ahead of human rights dialogues or in relation to key policy documents, promoted CSOs' involvement in the design of financial assistance, and enhanced EU support to CSOs facing restrictive measures.

Finally, the Action Plan enhanced the Union's visibility of action in the field of human rights and democracy and its accountability in relation to its partners, especially towards civil society.

The results of the past years provide a solid basis for the EU's continuous commitment to uphold respect for human rights and support democratic transition processes worldwide bilaterally, in partnership with other regional, local and international organisations, and at the multilateral level, especially within the United Nations. Many of the actions set out in the 2012-2014 Action Plan are now part and parcel of the Union's daily work – they enjoy the support of all stakeholders, they benefit from the existence of well-established procedures and are covered by an exhaustive set of guidance documents. For these reasons these actions no longer need to be prioritized in the context of the proposed new Action Plan. However, they will continue to feature in the Annual report on Human Rights and Democracy, in order to ensure visibility and accountability also in those areas.

On the other hand, some areas identified in the 2012-2014 Action Plan require renewed political commitment and additional efforts and thus will feature more prominently in the new Action Plan. This is the case, inter alia, for democracy support, which is going to be mainstreamed across a number of objectives; for Economic, Social and Cultural rights; for addressing violation of human rights and international humanitarian law in crises and conflicts; for fighting discrimination, particularly against women, children, persons with disabilities and LGBTI but also against members of religious minorities; for fighting torture and ill-treatment and for increasing the coherence of EU policies from a Human Rights point of view.

The new Action Plan should address these continuous challenges.

The way ahead

In light of the positive experience, the new Action Plan should cover the 2015-2019 period, in order to ensure full alignment with the mandate of the HRVP and of the European Commission.

The Action Plan would be subject to a mid-term implementation review in 2017 in order to allow for an assessment of the progress made and, if required, adjustments in the light of experience and of the emergence of new challenges. The review would coincide with the mid-term review of the external financing instruments and could contribute to greater coherence between EU policies and financial assistance.

The actions proposed under the Action Plan are geographically neutral and should apply to all regions of the world, taking into consideration local needs and specificities. These actions will be translated into country specific priorities through local Human Rights Country Strategies.

As regards candidate countries and potential candidates, the EU will continue to monitor their commitment to promoting the values of democracy, rule of law and respect for human rights - as laid out in Article 49 TEU - and to provide guidance and support to ensure tangible and sustained progress in these key reform areas.

As regards the European Neighbourhood Policy, a strong focus shall be placed on ensuring respect for fundamental rights and freedoms. The EU will continue to support partner countries with the implementation of reforms that foster inclusive dialogue, promote good governance, strengthen the independence of the judiciary and ensure protection of fundamental rights.

Principles

The new Action Plan should not endeavour to cover exhaustively all aspects of the Union's Human Rights/Democracy support policies. It should rather be strategic and focus on priorities where additional political momentum and enhanced commitment is needed. The Action Plan should guide both bilateral work and EU engagement in multilateral and regional fora, in particular the United Nations and the Council of Europe.

In this spirit, the proposed Action Plan would be guided by the following principles:

1. In an increasingly challenging global environment, the relevance of universal standards is questioned and the EU's endeavour to promote them meets with growing resistance. Promoting values through exogenous action alone is often not effective. Therefore, efforts should be focused on supporting endogenous forces. The EU should empower interlocutors in third countries (governmental, parliamentary, and quasi-governmental, as well as intermediaries between civil society and the state, such as political parties), reinforce the role of the judiciary, continue to support to civil society including social partners and promote enabling environments, strengthen the role and impact of regional organisations and mechanisms and reinforce cooperation with the United Nations which, with its universal membership, has greater leverage.
2. The EU must lead by example. It is under severe scrutiny for what are perceived as discrepancies in its approach to human rights issues (double standards and internal/external inconsistencies). Thus renewed commitment is required to improve coherence in addressing human rights and integrating human rights considerations in all aspects of EU external action and in the external aspects of internal policies, building on the approach developed by the Commission to ensure the effective implementation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights by the EU.
3. The EU must focus on the most pressing human rights challenges, which must be tackled both internally and externally. These challenges include in particular combatting discrimination, the respect for freedom of expression and privacy as well as insuring that human rights are upheld in migration, trade or counter-terrorism policies.

4. The EU should empower itself - the different instruments, tools and policies at its disposal need to be used more smartly and in a more strategic way, both in bilateral work and in engagement in multilateral fora.
5. Finally the EU should communicate better what it does, improve the capacity to measure impact and, whenever appropriate, devise alternative and more efficient approaches.

In light of the above, the enclosed Action Plan identifies the following five strategic areas of actions:

(i) Boosting the ownership of local actors: Human rights and democracy can only fully take root where there is strong local ownership. This chapter of the Action Plan focuses on actions and activities aimed at improving the way in which we interact with all external stakeholders, both governmental and non-governmental. Specific emphasis is given to challenges concerning the space for civil society;

ii) Addressing key human rights challenges: This chapter focuses on targeted thematic human rights challenges, while maintaining the necessary balance between civil and political rights on the one end and economic, social and cultural rights on the other. This list of actions complements and underpins the objectives pursued under the previous chapter;

(iii) Ensuring a comprehensive HR approach to conflict and crises: This chapter proposes a range of actions to promote and support the development of tools and policies at national, regional and international level to prevent, address and redress HR violations, with particular emphasis on the most serious crimes of concern to the international community. The chapter also reflects a clear need for the EU to adjust its existing tools to the changing nature of conflicts;

New heading: STRENGTHENING EU DEMOCRACY SUPPORT (see pp. 15-16)

(iv) Fostering better coherence and consistency: This chapter addresses the need for the Commission, together with the HRVP to mainstream further human rights considerations in the external aspects of EU policies, particularly with regard to trade/investment, migration/refugee/asylum and development policies as well as counter-terrorism, in order to ensure better policy coherence;

(v) Deepening the effectiveness and results culture in Human Rights and democracy: In the context of increasing challenges and limited resources, better use of existing instruments, activities and policies is the only way to increase the EU impact, on human rights and democracy. This chapter proposes actions which will help the EU develop more result-oriented and strategic approaches.

EU ACTION PLAN ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRACY

The purpose of this Action Plan is to continue implementing the EU Strategic Framework on Human Rights and Democracy, with sufficient flexibility so as to respond to new challenges as they arise. It builds upon the existing body of EU human rights and democracy support policies in the external action<sup>7</sup>, notably EU guidelines, toolkits and other agreed positions, and the various external financing instruments, in particular the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights.

In order to ensure an effective implementation of the Action Plan, it is important that the European institutions work together, as well as with relevant civil society and international organisations, while respecting their distinct institutional roles, and that, where appropriate, the Action Plan is implemented at national level by the Member States. Responsibility for carrying out the actions listed resides with the High Representative/Vice President assisted by the European External Action Service (EEAS), and with the Commission, the Council and Member States, within their respective fields of competence as defined by the Treaty on European Union<sup>8</sup>. The EU Special Representative for Human Rights shall contribute to implementation of the Action Plan, in accordance with his mandate. The Action Plan covers the period until 31 December 2019 and its implementation will be reviewed in 2017.
